Organisers of this year's Enviro Conference and Exhibition today announced they will run a national competition to find Australia's most notable sustainable innovation and announce the winner at the event, July 21 – 23 in Melbourne.

The award, sponsored by Sulo MGB Australia, will consider nominations from individuals, groups or companies who have completed a project in the past two years. These projects will be judged on their sustainability, innovation and successful implementation.

"The introduction of this award to our conference and exhibition program will create another opportunity for individuals, groups and companies to demonstrate the great progress we are making in planning for sustainability and infrastructure development across Australia" said Conference Chair, Max Spedding. "With the support of Sulo MGB we expect this to be a feature at our events in the future."

The intent of the Sulo Innovation in Sustainability Award is to recognize individuals, groups or companies who have recently completed a successful, innovative and sustainable project. Nominations are open for projects from across Australia and all nominations will be judged against a detailed criteria including novelty, social and environmental benefits and confirmed results. Nominations forms are available now and a registration is application for each nomination.

Full details of the Sulo Innovation in Sustainability Award are available on the Enviro website – www.enviro2010.com.au.
